

1912

This years work project was the completion of the sleeping porch attached to the south side of the main lodge and a small boathouse near the bay, south of the main lodge. The sleeping porch was a lean to type of construction with canvas walls like a large tent. The canvas had been salvaged from the sails of the "Fusilier". The area on the main lodge where the lean to was attached has since been covered by the siding but can be seen on close inspection.

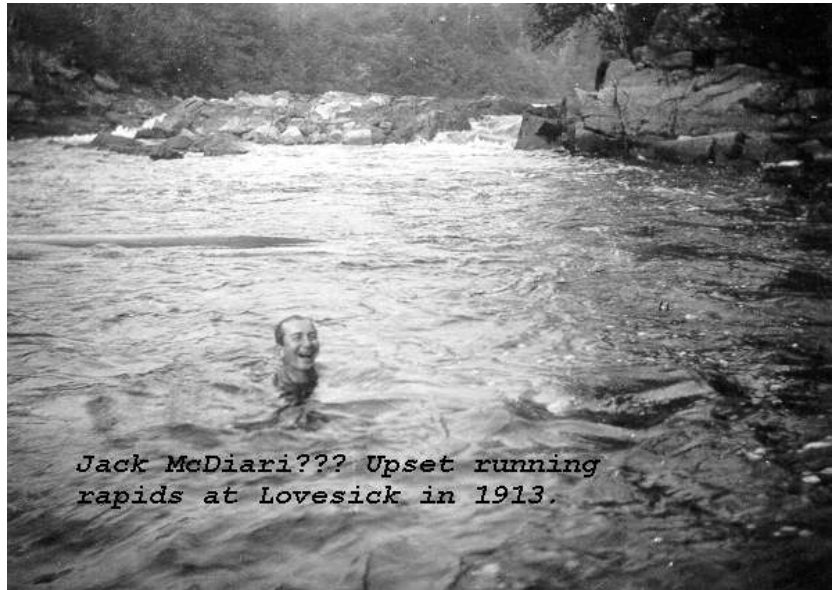

Celebrating a job well done. 1912.

The cook for the year was Thomas Longley.

Jack A. McDiarmid was in 1912 Camp not in 1913.
